This is a good example that I don't know what to write here to show you a small preview of the typography used in building my website, but hopefully it can give you a good idea on what to expect visiting it.

The 411 on the design principles of “disydesign motion studios”

The main concept was to keep things simple and clean. It follows a static symmetrical layout with a color palette of only 4 in order to emphasize more the number of pages this website contains.

These 4 pages, each containing a key piece of information, about what it can offer the user.

The navigation is kept simple with a crossfade transition between pages. The colors from the navigation panel also extend to the margins and borders of the main body text. It was made on purpose to keep the user informed on what page he/she is if the page extends vertically more than the actual device's screen size.

The main design has been changed from the original one in regards of the typefaces used and also the color scheme, now being brighter than previously intended. The background color has been changed from a purple #261F33 to a simple white background.

The main typeface used for the header and navigation remains “Raleway Medium” while the text typeface has been changed from Helvetica Neue to Embria. This typeface is a simple sans-serif combining itself pretty well with the other typeface used in the making of this site.

disydesign motion studios user reviews:

Laura: “The site itself is simple and easy to navigate. I feel that the content is copied from somewhere, but it doesn’t matter. I get what the site is about, but I think there is also a lot of room for improvement. For a first time it’s not bad.”

Anders: “I like the design and how the buttons animate. The colors are interesting and also a little unusual for what I’ve understood about the main idea for this site. Definitely needs more content and also a contact page, or at least an e-mail address.”

Jack: “For a school project it looks OK. It has a basic navigation and it’s pretty straight-forward about the content. The images could use a little work, maybe putting them in another container or separate them in another column. Other than that, it looks good.”

Diana: “I like the color scheme used and I think for the future you could use it more than the navigation. Try implementing it more in the background or different elements. More content please about the purpose of disydesign and not the style used.”
